AWS Direct Connect itself has no specific resources for you to control access to. Therefore, there are no AWS Direct Connect ARNs for you to use in an IAM policy. You use an asterisk (*) as the resource when writing a policy to control access to AWS Direct Connect actions.

NEW QUESTION: 4

If a Persistence application locks entity x with a pessimistic lock, which statement is true?

- A. Only single table per class hierarchy mapping is supported with this lock type.
- B. A Persistence provider will lock the entity relationships for which the locked entity contains the foreign key.
- C. The Persistent provider will lock the database row(s) that correspond to all persistent fields of properties of an instance, including element collections.
- D. A separate lock statement must be called for each subclass in entity hierarchy.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

NORMAL

public static final PessimisticLockScope NORMAL

This value defines the default behavior for pessimistic locking.

The persistence provider must lock the database row(s) that correspond to the non-collection-valued persistent state of that instance. If a joined inheritance strategy is used, or if the entity is otherwise mapped to a secondary table, this entails locking the row(s) for the entity instance in the additional table(s). Entity relationships for which the locked entity contains the foreign key will also be locked, but not the state of the referenced entities (unless those entities are explicitly locked). Element collections and relationships for which the entity does not contain the foreign key (such as relationships that are mapped to join tables or unidirectional one-to-many relationships for which the target entity contains the foreign key) will not be locked by default.
