NEW QUESTION: 1

Big Co. owns 18% of Little Co. Little Co. is a public company. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder.

- A. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder.
- B. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder.
- C. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder.
- D. Big Co. is not a controlling shareholder.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Less than 20% ownership is presumed to result in little or no influence over the investee. Such investments are initially recorded at cost and subsequently measured using the fair value method. If the investor classifies the shares as trading securities, unrealized holding gains and losses are included in the calculation of profit or loss. If the investor classifies the shares as available-for-sale securities, unrealized holding gains and losses are treated as items of other comprehensive income.

NEW QUESTION: 2

Which two statements regarding the IS-IS DIS election process are true? (Choose two.)

- A. Separate L1 and L2 election processes are held on a broadcast network.
- B. Adding a router with a higher priority than the current DIS will result in the new router becoming DIS.
- C. If there is a tie based on priority, the router whose attached interface has the lowest MAC address becomes the DIS.
- D. If the DIS becomes unavailable the backup DIS is promoted to DIS.
- E. L1 routers on a broadcast network only establish adjacencies with the DIS.
- F. A priority of 0 will prevent a router from becoming a DIS.

Answer: A,B

NEW QUESTION: 3

Which two options are causes of out-of-order packets? (Choose two.)

- A. high latency
- B. a router in the packet flow path that is intermittently dropping packets
- C. a routing loop
- D. packets in a flow traversing multiple paths through the network
- E. some packets in a flow being process-switched and others being interrupt-switched on a transit router

Answer: D,E

Explanation:

In traditional packet forwarding systems, using different paths have varying latencies that cause out of order packets, eventually resulting in far lower performance for the network application. Also, if some packets are process switched quickly by the routing engine of the router while others are interrupt switched (which takes more time) then it could result in out of order packets. The other options would cause packet drops or latency, but not out of order packets.
