Answer: C,D

NEW QUESTION: 2

What differentiates a user-defined custom dimension from the Entity and Account dimensions?

- A. You can only add custom attributes to user-defined custom dimensions.
- B. You can easily delete a user-defined custom dimension in Planning but you cannot delete an Entity dimension.
- C. You assign valid plan types for the user-defined custom dimension at the dimension level.
- D. You assign data types for the user-defined custom dimension at the dimension level.
- E. You cannot: assign security for user-defined custom dimensions.

Answer: C

Explanation:

User-defined custom dimensions differ from the Entity and Account dimensions in that you assign valid plan types at the dimension level, not at the member level. All members of a user defined custom dimension are valid for plan types assigned at the dimension level.

NEW QUESTION: 3

A network architect is planning a solution for a customer's campus LAN. The customer has a existing network that consists of three tiers. The new HP switches are being deployed at the access layer, and the existing network infrastructure is using Cisco Per-VLAN Spanning Tree (PVST+) between the access layer and the distribution layer.

The customer has listed support for PVST+ as a top requirement for the solution, and the customer network managers are somewhat hostile to the idea of adding HP switches.

What should the network architect do?

- A. The network architect explain that, although HP switches do not support PVST+, they do support Intelligent Resilient Framework (IRF), which eliminates the need for any loop protection.
- B. The network architect should select HP switches that support PVST+ and use intelligent Resilient Framework (IRF) for other benefits
- C. The network architect should convince the network managers to migrate the entire network to Multiple Spanning Tree Protocol (MSTP) based on the flexibility of the protocol.
- D. The network architect should check whether the existing switches support smart link and then work with the customer to implement that protocol across the network instead of link aggregation or spanning tree.

Answer: B
