- Answer: B,C,D

NEW QUESTION: 3

A company has a standard three-tier architecture using two Availability Zones. During the company's off season, users report that the website is not working. The Solutions Architect finds that no changes have been made to the environment recently, the website is reachable, and it is possible to log in. However, when the Solutions Architect selects the "find a store near you" function, the maps provided on the site by a third-party RESTful API call do not work about 50% of the time after refreshing the page. The outbound API calls are made through Amazon EC2 NAT instances.

What is the MOST likely reason for this failure and how can it be mitigated in the future?

- A. One of the NAT instances failed. Recommend replacing the EC2 NAT instances with a NAT gateway.
- B. The fault is in the third-party environment. Contact the third party that provides the maps and request a fix that will provide better uptime.
- C. The network ACL for one subnet is blocking outbound web traffic. Open the network ACL and prevent administration from making future changes through IAM.
- D. One NAT instance has become overloaded. Replace both EC2 NAT instances with a larger-sized instance and make sure to account for growth when making the new instance size.

Answer: A
