NEW QUESTION: 3

Constructive team roles include:

- A. Withdrawer, harmonizer and blocker.
- B. Information giver, devil's advocate and clarifier.
- C. Encourager, initiator and gatekeeper.
- D. Summarizer, recognition seeker and information seeker.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Constructive and destructive are team roles that indicate how your attitude effects overall team development. A constructive team role is one that helps team development and a destructive one is that which hampers team development. Accordingly, Constructive team roles are:

1. Initiator - lets do this
2. Information seeker - don't we have better information?

3.Information giver - My experience has been that...
4.Encourager - Mary, that was very helpful
5.Clarifiers - I believe we are saying that....
6.Gate Keeper - We have not heard Mary's opinion on this issue yet. What do you think, Mary?
7.Harmonizer - I believe that we are all saying the same thing
8.Summarizer - I feel that we can now reach an agreement As opposed to the above positive roles, Destructive team roles are:

- 1.Aggressor criticizes and attempts to deflate other
- 2.Blocker does not want to listen to what other people say
- 3.Withdrawer is withdrawn
- 4.Recognition seeker sole purpose is to attract attention and gain recognition
- 5.Topic jumper jumps topics
- 6.Dominator dominates the discussion
- 7.Devil's advocate always pokes hole in other's logic As you can see, B, C and D have a destructive role each. A is the correct answer with all three roles being constructive [Note: Devils Advocate is normally used for a constructive purpose. A person plays the role of negating many suggestions to evoke team members to participate and come up with ideas. It's commonly used as an idea generation technique. Hence I feel Devil's Advocate is not a destructive role. It is true that it can be positive or negative. I have usually seen it classified as "destructive" just because when used in extreme, you really prevent others from feeling safe enough to voice their own opinion.]
